A BRIEF HISTORY OF NORWOOD MANOR

NORWOOD MANOR IN 1904

NORWOOD MANOR

The ancient manor of Norwood stands close to the highest point on Sheppey and enjoys extensive views across the North Kent marshes to the ridge of the Kent downs. This, combined with two fresh water springs, would once have made Norwood a site of great strategic importance.

The Norwood family tree is a remarkable one. The present members, most of whom live in America, can trace their ancestors back a thousand years to Earl Godwin, and beyond.

Earl Godwin, owned large tracts of land in the neighbourhood of Cyningburg in Sheppey. The modern translation of Cyningburg is Kingsborough,the manor adjoining Norwood. Earl Godwin died in 1053, his daughter Editha married Edward the Confessor. When Edward died, Earl Godwin's son, Harold, claimed the throne of England. King Harold was killed at the battle of Hastings by William the Conqueror in 1066. King William actually had a better claim to the throne than Harold and felt secure enough to allow Harold's family to live.

Harold's wife, Edith Swannaschells was sent to be a nun at the monastery of Minster in Sheppey, and his son Alnod, after a period of imprisonment, also came to Sheppey. His father's property would have been forfeit to the crown, so his grandfather's land on Sheppey may have been all he had. In Norman England, being the son of King Harold was not an asset, so Alnod and his family lay low, changed their name, and waited until their links with the old king were forgotten.

In 1126 it is recorded that the paramount Lord of Sheppey died. His name was Jordanus De Sheppey, and he lived at Northwode manor. It is believed that Jordanus and Alnod were father and son, or one and the same. Jordanus had a son Stephen who assumed the name Northwode. The Northwode family coat of arms is of great interest, it is a red cross engrail on a white background. This is just slightly different from the plain red cross of England, and is further evidence of a royal connection.

This early part of the Norwood family tree is fairly speculative, the records from this period of history being very sketchy. However, the records from Stephen the first Norwood, to the present day, are remarkably complete.
To list all the Norwoods to the present day would take too long, but they were there, playing their part in the events that shaped history.
One of the first Norwoods, was a crusader with Richard I and one was knighted for gallantry at Agincourt in 1415. A John Norwood was the Constable of Queenborough Castle in 1461 . He was the last male of that line, and when he died, Norwood manor was sold to William Warner Esq.
Other branches of the family had spread out from Sheppey, first to the near mainland where 2 properties still bear the Norwood name, then to other parts of the country.
In the 1640's the Norwoods started emigrating to the new world and by 1700, the different lines from all over England had gone.
A Colonel Henry Norwood was the Treasurer of Virginia, and there are places in America which bear the Norwood name. There are many descendants now living in America. They have regular reunions publish news letters, and have a geneaologist researching their ancestors. They consider Norwood in Sheppey to be their ancestral home and occasionally, some of them make the pilgrimage back to the Isle of Sheppey.
After the manor was sold to William Werner in the 1460's, it is unclear what happened to it. With the Norwoods out of the way, the Cheyneys of Shurland became the most powerful family on Sheppey, and by the middle of the 16th century, Sir Thomas Cheyney owned most of the Island, including Norwood.
For hundreds of years the Norwoods and the Shurland – Cheyney familys had coexisted on Sheppey. Some believe that both families were descended from Jordanus de Sheppey, and this is why they never intermarried.

Sir Thomas Cheyney may have set about rewriting history to exclude the Norwoods and make the Cheyneys appear to have been the overlords of Sheppey since the dawn of time.

The Norwoods had been great patrons of the Monastery at Minster. There were many Norwood memorials in the abbey church, and it is recorded that the Norwood coat of arms was prominently displayed even at the time of the dissolution. The Shurlands and Cheyneys were buried in a small private chapel in the grounds. At the time of the dissolution in 1536, the monastery was granted to Sir Thomas Cheyney. The Norwood coat of arms disappeared, and all but two of the Norwood memorials have been lost.

The two remaining memorials are a pair of brasses of Sir John and his wife Lady Joan which date from 1319, and are of considerable interest. Thomas Cheyney's own tomb now stands in the centre of the church.

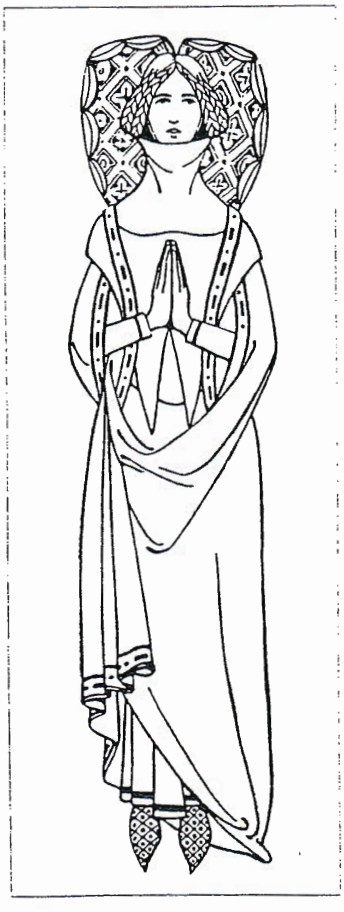

We believe that the Cheyneys had most of the ancient manor house at Norwood demolished, and used the materials at Shurland Hall, which was greatly enlarged in the 1520's and 1530's.

Shurland hall was now a massive building which dominated the island, and the Norwoods were forgotten.

In 1559 the great Sir Thomas Cheyney died and his son Henry squandered the family fortune. Henry chose not to live on Sheppey, so Shurland Hall stood empty and started to decay. In 1580 Queen Elizabeth took up the estate. The hall was reduced to a farm house, and the materials were sold off.

The first Norwood Manor was probably a simple wooden fort. In the 13th century many of these timber buildings were replaced by small stone houses. Beneath the present house is a stone undercroft and other remains, which probably date from this period. The house would have grown and changed over the years until it was mostly demolished probably in around 1500.

In 1580 Norwood became a separate farm again, and a new house was required.
The south half of Norwood manor follows the typical patern of a house built in 1600. The materials however are earlier the bricks being from the 1500's , and some of the timbers may be from the 1400's. It is almost certain that the materials were from Shurland. Some may have been the very materials taken from Norwood to Shurland about 100 years before.
One curious feature about the house built in 1600 is it size, and quality. Far in excess of what was normal for a small farmhouse of the period.
We know that a Manasses Norwood of Dane Court in Thanet purchased some of the manor lands that belonged to his ancestors in Sheppey. Maybe Manasses had a hand in the rebuilding of his ancestral home .
The house continued to be altered and adapted and sometime in the 18th century, the north wing was demolished and rebuilt. This was probably a single storey service wing and was replaced by the two storey north half of the present house. Sometime in the 18th or 19th century, the attic floor in the south half became disused, the dormer windows were removed and the attic became a store.
We know that a Thomas Coveney farmed and lived at Norwood with his family from about 1840 to 1874. In 1880 the Coultrip family arrived and farmed for several generations until 1964. After 1964, the house was used to accomodate farm workers and fell into disrepair. In 1987 the farm changed hands. The new owners did not require the house and so it was sold to the present owners, Martin and Rosemary Hawkins.
Since 1987 a programme of research and restoration has been in progress. The house has proved to be far more interesting than anyone realised and the work will take many years to complete.

LADY JOAN DE BADLESMERE
(WIFE OF SIR JOHN) 1319

SIR JOHN DE NORTHWODE

Sir John de Northwode

Sir John de Northwode was knighted by Edward I and summoned to Parliament by Edward II in 1313. He died a few years later, and his memorial brass dates from circa 1325. The lower portion, which is a palimpsest, dates only from 1511.

His head rests on an embroidered cushion, and his feet on a lion. He wears a plain steel bascinet, or helmet, and a camail and thigh-length hauberk, both of banded mail (metal rings sewn to a leather foundation).

Scalloped discs of metal cover his elbows and shoulders; vambraces of overlapping scales protect his forearms; his hands are bare. Below the hauberk is the edge of the padded hauketon, and over it the light cyclas or surcoat, longer at the back than the front.

The heavy chain over the left shoulder secured the tilting helm normally carried on the back. The large concave shield bears the Northwode arms - ermine, a cross engrailed gules - and almost conceals the sword.

Lady Joan de Northwode

Lady Joan de Northwode, a daughter of the de Badlesmere family, and wife to Sir John, died circa 1325, and her life-size portrait is one of the earliest female brasses in England, though it, and the companion portrait of Sir John, may in fact be of French workmanship.

Over a long, close-fitting kirtle with tight full-length sleeves, she wears a flowing mantle gathered up under the right arm. There are wide openings for the arms, and long pointed lappets, showing the lining of vair (a mixture of furs) fall over the bosom. No other example of this fashion occurs in England, though it is common in French brasses of the period.

Her neck and chin are shrouded in an unbecoming wimple, denoting noble birth; unusually, she has no fillet or kerchief. Her head, the hair braided in two thick plaits, rests on an elaborately embroidered cushion.

The lap dog at her feet wears three small bells on his collar.

LATE SIXTEENTH AND SEVENTEENTH CENTURY BRASSES AT LECKHAMPTON, GLOUCESTERSHIRE

In The Norwoods I Chapter V, page 20 is the story of the fine Elizabethan brass in the church of St. Peter, Leckhampton, and of how we made the rubbing, but no illustration of its was shown.

There was somewhat of a revival in brasses in the reign of Elizabeth I, and we are fortunate that this brass to the memory of Elizabeth Norwood (Fig. 97) was engraved during this period, A.D. 1598. I have taken the description of this brass from Monumental Brasses of Gloucestershire page 181.

"In the brass William Norwood has his hair closely cropped, but his moustache is allowed to grow. A stiff ruff encircles his neck, a fashion noticed sarcastically by the writers of the period. His cloak covers the rest of his attire, except the top of his doublet and its tight-fitting sleeves. From the shoulders hang long false sleeves, unadorned. Behind him kneel nine sons. Their hair is cut short and they wear ruffs. Their cloaks appear to be sleeveless, an consequently we see more of the long breasted doublet—on the thre elder sons, this doublet is represented as fastened by a row of button but the mode of fastening is not shown on the others. Their cloak are short, so that the long hose from the knees are shown. By th left of the eldest son hangs a sword.

"Elizabeth Norwood wears a French hood, with a hanging vei a large ruff like her husband. The over-gown is thrown back a littl to show the plaited partlet. Her costume is marked by extrem simplicity and lack of embroidery work, which so lavishly bedecke the dress at this period. Behind her kneel two daughters somewh similarly attired, but with no veils to their head dresses. The husban and wife are kneeling to a low fald-stool with a flat desk, on whic two open books are lying. The book in front of William Norwoo has leather thongs for fastening, and the one before his wife h clasps. Over the fald-stool is their coat of arms, ermine a cro engrailed gules, Norwood, impaling argent, two lions passant gule Lygon. Above Elizabeth is a scroll Expecto donec veniat invitatio m —I wait until my summons may come. Below is the followir inscription:

ELIZABETHA NORWOODD UXOR GULLELMI NORWOOD

"Elizabeth Norwood, wife of William Norwood Esquire, to who she bore nine sons, two daughters, having lived fifty years, she pious and peacefully died in Christ, on April 16 A.D. 1598.

I who eleven times did multiply
Myself on earth, cannot in one death die,
Rather my lively spirit both worlds shall roam,
Heaven is my soul's—earth is my offspring's home:
If then I freely range both spheres of space
I perish not in any resting place."

FACES OF THE COAST

Christy Pritchett/The Mississippi Press

Larry Norwood

Larry Norwood has been providing "melt in your mouth" treats to the community for 15 years. Norwood & Sons Snowballs on Ladnier Road in Gautier has been a popular spot for locals to go and cool off during the heat of the summer. Norwood operates his stand with his wife and other family members every day of the week. Norwood started his first snowball stand when he was a child in his father's store. It was always his dream to own his own business and have something to leave to his children. The 40-year Gautier resident loves watching Saints football and says he is an avid fan of the team and has been following them since he was a boy.
